As southern Floridians waved their white handkerchiefs, their heroes ran up the finest record in pro football history. The men from Miami played 14 regular-season and three post-season games in 1972, and won all 17. They beat a veteran Cleveland club and a rising Pittsburgh team in the playoffs, and then, remarkably, found themselves underdogs for the Super Bowl.

But they silenced all doubters by utterly dominating George Allen's "Over-the-Hill Gang" in the finale, and won the game 14-7 in spite of Garo Yepremian's infamous pass attempt after a blocked field goal. That "pass" was a pathetic lob which traveled perhaps a few feet before being grabbed by corner Mike Bass, who returned it for Washington's only score.

Larry Csonka, Paul Warfield, Mercury Morris and quarterbacks Bob Griese and Earl Morrall were offensive standouts, and Manny Fernandez, Nick Buoniconti, Dick Anderson and Jake Scott headed up the "No-Name" defense for Miami. Their Super Bowl opponents boasted a brilliant all-purpose back in Larry Brown and a rock-ribbed defense.

Other notables in this 1972 set include O.J. Simpson, Fran Tarkenton, Joe Namath, Dick Butkus, Leroy Kelly, Mike Ditka, John Riggins, rookie Franco Harris and All-Pro defensive tackle Mike Reid, better known these days as a country-and-western music star.

Take yourself back in time with the 1972 football season. (It's also available as a Team Disk for the computer game. See page 11.)
